WESTERN LEAGUE.

Indianapolis Credited with One Game

Too Many from Milwankee. In the supposed official table of the Western League clubs' standing the Indianapolis team is credited with having won eight games from Milwaukee, when, as a matter of fact, the number is but seven. Indianapolis captured six of these games here and one at Milwaukee, June 10. Milwaukee has won four from Indianapolis and seven games remain to be played, five at the former city and two here. The Journal's old table was therefore correct, and the club is a tie with Kansas City for fifth place, and one victory short of the .500 mark. The standing

SKINNED BY GORMAN.

(Concluded from First Page.) by money that ought to go into the treasury of the United States. "God knows we have enough trusts," said Mr. Gorman. "I will never consent to allow this mammoth foreign corporation to invade our territory and take the substance away from our people.

Mr. Gorman's reference to the sugar question was in the following words:

"Mr. President, there is only one other serious proposition as I understand it involved in this controversy and that is the subject of sugar. Our friends on the other side, with great generalship, saw the weak point in our line from the beginning. In the construction of the McKinley bill they made free sugar the pivot so that they might increase the duties on their own wares and the output of their factories. They attempted to secure free sugar by fighting us when we attempted to reverse their McKinley act, outwitting us by going back and putting on the dutiable list an article which they put on the free list. They managed it well. They know how to stir up the animosities and the feelings which are natural with us against ings which are natural with us against duties on anything whatever. They used the press of their party to charge all sorts of bad motives against the men who were in favor of putting sugar on the dutiable list. They twitted us on the floor and you found it on the streets. You had scarcely gotten into the consideration of the bill before they wanted to investigate us and see whether we were not selling out to a trust. The men who made the trust became suddenly virtuous for the purpose of killing our bill. They managed it so astutely that the bill really lost many honest men inside and outside of this chamber. This was a battle between the two sides. You have conducted it, if not on the highest plane, as well as a Modoc Indian ever conducted a campaign. (Laughter.) That you demoralized some of our forces and made them run to the bomb-proof house where they might be safe is irue. I have seen honorable men denouncing or rather correcting in the papers, the ing, or rather correcting in the papers, the horrible statements which have been put forth to demoralize them, and it is but natural that they should have done so. But the majority of us are accustomed to shot and shell, but have never yet flinched, because we know that no matter how distasteful it was to us personally, the vote of the Louisiana Senators was necessary to us. We knew more than that, that a fair duty on sugar was the first consideration to the treasury. Your legislation has left us bankrupt until we have been compelled to sell bonds. We do not intend when we get our bill through to increase the bonded debt. If we do not get our bill through that may and probably will happen."

WHAT HE DID FOR CLEVELAND. Then reverting to the President, he said: 'Mr President, I speak of the President of the United States with nothing but the kindest feelings. I have never in my life had anything but the kindest feelings for him. I believe he is one of the most remarkable men ever in public life in the last fifty years in any civilized country on the face of the globe. To elect him the first time he was a candidate I gave my constant, unremitting labor. I stood by him when he had but few who had the moral courage to walk through the slime and filth and uphold him. I supported his nomination for the second time, though not agreeing with the policy of his declarations in the message of 1887, and I stood by my friend, the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Brice), who gave to the nomination of Mr. Cleveland his substance and his time and everything that a man can give to serve a great cause I stood with him from the beginning of the campaign to the end. I was not in favor of Mr. Cleveland's nomination again in 1892, as a matter of policy, but I, with the distinguished Senator from Ohio (Mr. Brice), and the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Hill), who carried the battle flag in that State, and the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ransom), never permitted anything to stop our efforts until we placed him in this high station. We did it with an admiration for the man, with a belief that he would serve his country well, but did it also in order that we might have Democratic control in this government. "I have given the President a fair support and an honest support; never sub-servient; never swayed by the want of pat-ronage or by patronage, ready to stand with him on whatever was right. He has no cause of complaint against me. I am not his debtor. Let him answer for himself. But in the campaign of 1892, when men's cheeks were blanched with fear, my friend, the junior Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Smith), active as was the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Brice), and I and the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Hill), who I hear now opposes this bill, went to the front to lead in that campaign and made a Democratic victory possible, starting the first great cheer which gave hope and comfort to the country. Louislana, through its two Senators, Gibson and White, wanted to know before we entered on the campaign-with no threat, with no man had a right to make-what the policy of the party was to be under the apparently free-trade resolutions adopted at Chicago. After a great deal of talk and most careful consideration that candidate of our party told them, as he told the public through his letter, that the Democratic party was not to destroy industries; that it should place a fair duty on dutiable articles, a revenue duty; that the bill which had met his approval was the Mills bill, and on the line of the Mills bill the Democratic party would act. The junior Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Smith), Mr. Brice and myself did that, giving our time and our money and everything that man can give for the success of the party. We con-ferred with all those distinguished gentlemen. We were not at the conference with the candidate, but had it from both sides what occurred. They wanted to know if the Democratic organization of which we were a part put the same construction on it, and would be in favor of that line of procedure hereafter? They said to us, frankly, we want to tell our people the truth. We do not want to press you to give a single fraction of a cent to Louisiana, but we orly want to know the truth. At that solemn conclave we all said: 'Yes, it is a dutiable article; it is to be and must be the cornerstone by which we will over-throw McKinleyism. You shall have it.' CLAIMS A CLEAN RECORD.

"In all my public career no man has ever charged me with perfidy. No soul can say that I ever made a promise about public or private matters that I did not carry out if I had the power to do it. These two Senators and myself, carrying out the pledge of our party, whose candidate was indorsed by us, have stood here and been gibbeted as men who are in a sugar trust. I was true to those to whom I am indebted. No man here would believe differently.
"The conferees in this matter on the part of the Senate have a great duty to perform. There are almost irreconcilable differences. But I want them to say to the conferees on the other side: 'Now, above all other things, gentlemen, the law must be observed. Harmony can only be had by standing by the letter of the law. You, who make laws with us, must not violate them. There is in this case the written and unwritten law, to which there is no excep-tion, and that is that where one house proposes to change an existing statute and the other refuses to go so far, the house making the radical demand shall give way. That is the law. That is the custom. Whenever it is insisted on there is no escape from it if you intend to have legislation.' "You can say, Mr. Chairman," addressing Chairman Voorhees, "that while there has been great talk about people coming out in the open, Senator after Senator announcing what he is bound to do as a matter of conscience if that radical change is demanded, I do not mean that you shall not have a free and fair conference. I would have a free and fair conference. I would exclude everything except your own thoughts. The country can say that in this body now, where we have only one majority among the Democrats, that the great | and St. Laurent also ran. State of Ohio, the State of New Jersey, the State of New York and the States of Louisiana and Maryland step out to the front and tell the public frankly what ought to have been told only in private, and say that within the borders of the States I have named, while they number five or six, there is more manufacturing industry than in all the States which demand this radical change. Say to them that at this time, when the whole world s ablaze with revolution in industrial affairs, and want and distress are felt, the Senators have said to you they cannot go further; they prefer to make a mistake for high rates rather than to have them too low; that it is wise statesmanship, true patriotism, to make the mistake and make the tax too high and let these laboring people go to work rather than to make it too low and thereby keep them all in order, too low and thereby keep them all in order, too. Mr. President, with our rules, this bill stands, as I think, in the best shape possible to get it to represent our views. I appeal to my colleagues on this side to stand together, with the perfect knowledge that if we do not the bill is defeated. If my good friend from New York, Mr. Hill, or the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Vilas, succeeds, and any Democrat may succeed. succeeds-and any Democrat may succeed by uniting with them and any others in amending the bill-you have the declaration of enough Senators to know that you de-

"What is our duty? What did we agree to do when we placed in your hands, Mr. Chairman, and you Democrats, the power to say what we ought to do after careful and unfettered conference? No such confidence on the part of all our party has ever been given to men as we have to you. Let this degree of confidence continue. Let this bill go to a conference on the part of the two houses. These thunderclouds will roll by, these flashes of lightning, these exhibitions of temper, all must clear the atmosphere and enable the conferees to give new hope and new life to the American people." (Applause in the gallaries.) Senator White followed Mr. Gorman. Senator White followed Mr. Gorman. He said that the question of merits on the tariff was infinitely superior to the question of taste as to the President's letter read in the House. He reviewed the difficulties in framing the tariff bill. Free coal and free iron would be a great boon to California. The State pays almost the entire coal tax, and yet this bill was cheerfully accepted because it was the best that could be had. There was nothing for the Senate to do but to vote for the resolution of, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. Gray) to insist on the Senate bill. If the Vilas resolution were adopted it would Vilas resolution were adopted it would open the door to a flood of amendments and would precipitate another long and acrimonious contest over the tariff. If the bill were amended to include free iron and free coal the Senator from New York (Mr. Hill) knew that the bill would be impossible and he would be impossible to the senator from the senator fr periled and he would probably shed no tears at its peril. "How will it be imperiled?" asked Mr. "What single Senator's vote would be lost by an amendment for free coal and Mr. White said that Hill himself would vote against the bill, as the income tax was in it. As Mr. White closed, the presiding officer announced that the next order of business was the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from New York (Mr. Hill) to recede from the Senate's position on coal and iron. Mr. Cockrell, Democrat, of Missouri, interposed with a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. To the surprise of the crowds in the galleries. as well as to some of the Senators, the motion prevailed. The galleries were cleared and the stirring proceedings of the day summarily brought to a close. At 3:38 the Senate adjourned until to-morrow

The House Was Listening. WASHINGTON, July 23.-The House found itself without a quorum early to-day. The call showed 180 present, a few more than a quorum, but the committee on rules reported a resolution to direct the Sergeant-at-arms to bring absentees to the bar of the House. Mr. Reed desired an adjournment to listen to the eloquence of the Senate, and was suggesting "Our friends still seem to be answering the indictment, and are pleading complicity on the part of the grand jury," when the Speaker sharply rapped him down. Mr. Reed there-upon demanded the yeas and nays on the rule. A failure to find a quorum resulted, and, on motion of Mr. Bynum, the House adjourned at 1:30.

And now the painful consequence we see.
